1. On 31 December 1951, six American fighters, which were referred to as "Aero-Cobras" by a Russian, were observed at Garz airfield. Additional aircraft of the same type were at the field up to mid-December 1951. The aircraft which were shipped via Swinemuende were allegedly to be salvaged because no spare parts were available. Three twin-engine planes and two biplanes which were also at the field were used for meteorological purposes. A transport flew between Kolberg and Garz several times a week at irregular intervals. *
2. Between 28 December 1951 and 12 January 1952, Peenemuende airfield was not occupied by aircraft of flying personnel. There was only a Soviet guard detail which consisted of 1 captain and 20 Ek. **

25X1 * Comment. Garz airfield is assigned to the Soviet Naval Air Force. It appears that the field is not occupied by a fully equipped air unit. A jet fighter regiment which, according to press reports, is said to be located at the field has not been reported.

25X1  Comment. According to previous reports, Peenemuende airfield was apparently turned over by the Twenty-Fourth Air Army to the Soviet Naval Air Force in mid-November 1951, after a fighter regiment was transferred from Peenemuende to Puetritz.
